EL PASO -- William "Bill" Harris, president and CEO of Science Foundation Arizona, a Phoenix economic development organization set up to stimulate Arizona's innovation economy, has been added to the board of directors of the Bi-National Sustainability Laboratory in Santa Teresa.

The lab is aimed at developing technology businesses along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Before joining the Arizona foundation, Harris was director general of Science Foundation Ireland, an Irish agency that facilitated growth in Ireland's research and development sector during his tenure.

Paul Maxwell, Bi-National lab executive director, said Harris' broad experience in economic development, academics, and national and international economic policy would contribute greatly to the lab's mission.
